

Why We Need More Food Security Assessments

Recognize Problems

through a food assessment looking at factors like where it is being produced, the average cost compared to other places, local production, food quality, environmental aspects, and cultural traditions.

Present Solutions

by giving solutions and recommendations a tailor-made for the individual communities

Local

solutions like farmers markets, community garden space, or even community processing centers.

Statewide

assistance through projects and grants with the help of groups like the AFPC.

Personalized

approaches allowing culturally appropriate individual needs to be heard and community-orientated solutions created.
